

Since childhood, a crowded and cluttered living room of my mind had a visual memory disguised in many colourful patterns and shades, my connection with the camera remained un-realized for a very long time until I entered my teenage life, where I developed an instinct for creativity and got fascinated by the visual world of art and media.

I always carried a very imaginative and creative mind as during school projects and art classes I always had an inclination towards adding something more to the task assigned, whether it was about a more colourful background or a more vibrant outlook for a painting or be it a class group photo, I always liked going an extra mile to perfect the task.

They say without learning you never evolve so this passion took me to numerous workshops where I got multifaceted opportunities to acquire skills from photo-capturing to photo rendering and editing, I also got hands on lessons and practice for various editing software tools which in return helped me to broaden my understanding for photography and video production.

Over the years my idea of photography grew a bit wider and I was able to see a whole horizon of versatility growing in the field of film production and I could imagine a whole career ahead of me. So, I decided to land into Bolton University and till date that has been the best decision I ever made. Not only brought a film maker out of me but let me into a professional world of film production. As the main aim of the course was to make me learn and apply core skills needed for pre and post film making needs, it has also enlightened my mind, building a sense of understanding for minor details that go with every shot being taken.

Since the beginning of my course my ambitions have been clear and I am pursuing my goals an open mind. My academic and extracurricular activities have been a great source of learning and inspiration for me. With all my craze and passion for film production, my ambition and hard
